

RISK AND BENEFITS OF MEDICATION ASSISTED TREATMENT IN SUBSTANCE USE DISORDERS

This presentation will address the risk and benefits of medication assisted treatment in Substance Use Disorders, in particular opioid dependence. The program will address how medication assisted treatment integrates with other modalities of treatment and 12 step programs. Information will also be provided about the appropriate duration of medication assisted treatment.

Course Objectives:

1. Discuss the risks and benefits of medication assisted treatment for Substance Use Disorders, in particular opioid dependence.
2. Describe the integration of medication assisted treatment with other modalities of treatment of addiction.
3. Review the appropriate duration of medication assisted treatment.

Dr. P. Joseph Frawley graduated from Medical School in 1976. He has been certified in addiction medicine since 1983 and has participated in the development of specific treatment programs for cocaine, methamphetamine, and heroin dependence. He has also contributed to research in the use of Buprenorphine for the treatment of opiate dependence. Dr. Frawley is an expert on patients who have chronic pain complicated by the use of mood altering medications. Much of his work has been centered on appropriate pain management for patients, particularly in patients who have chemical dependency as well as chronic pain. Dr. Frawley is currently a member of the American Academy of Pain Medicine. He has served as one of the physician members of the Rehabilitation Institute of Santa Barbara's chronic pain program.

He is currently engaged principally in the private practice of Internal Medicine, is one of the attending physicians at the Cottage Hospital Chemical Dependency Program in Santa Barbara, and is Associate Medical Director of the Cottage Residential Treatment Program.
